BLACK LIVES MATTER

Dedicated to all Black lives who have suffered at the hands of police brutality.

Chinese food is my life. My family grew up in Chinese restaurants, my grandfather was a master chef and I work at a Chinese BBQ shop part-time on weekends. My day job is in social impact. I lead creative teams at a NYC based, Black-led agency that examines the relationship between people, power and social change to transform our politics and the economy.

This digital edition of Chinese Protest Recipes is available free of charge. In exchange: Please donate to support Black Lives Matter.

#ChineseProtestRecipes

Since this uprising began, I've been using my platform to help raise awareness about racism and white supremacy in food. I couldn't stay quiet anymore, this racial pandemic has shed light on so many issues that BIPOC deal with every single day. I've been protesting through the one thing I know: Chinese food.

GOALS FOR THIS BOOK

- 1. SUPPORT BLACK LIVES MATTER
- 2. RAISE AWARENESS ABOUT RACISM AND WHITE SUPREMACY
- 3. RESIST THROUGH CHINESE FOOD

ABOUT THE RECIPES

These are not step-by-step recipes with precise quantities or detailed instructions. Instead, they're written as short descriptions, inspired by family tradition and oral history, so you can grasp the general concept of each dish. I encourage everyone to cook intuitively, rather than blindly following a strict recipe. This is how my ancestors cooked, it's all by taste, common sense and good judgement. The final quantities of each ingredient will ultimately depend on your palette, what you have on hand and how many people you're cooking for. Unless noted, all these recipes are meant to be cooked in a carbon steel wok.

I am also assuming you have some basic Chinese ingredients in your pantry. You will need the following on hand:

MSG
CORNSTARCH
VEGETABLE OIL
SHAOXING
WINE
SOY SAUCE

OYSTER SAUCE

SHRIMPS IN LOBSTER SAUCE

This dish is near and dear to my heart. My mom made it all the time so it's a childhood favorite, but it's also an old school classic found on many Chinatown menus. An amazing restaurant version can be found at Wo Hop in NYC, which inspired this recipe. There is no lobster in this recipe. The shrimps and egg work together to mimic a "lobster sauce"—a hallmark of Chinese chop suey-era ingenuity.

Chinatowns and Chinese people are no strangers to racism and discrimination. And yet, we still have a lot of work to do within our own community. As I make this Chinatown classic, I'm reminded that we must continue to do the work, and talk to our Asian families about anti-Black behaviour and attitudes. Chinatowns have gone through a lot during COVID-19. But Chinese people will never face the same level of discrimination that Black people do. We must stay focused, stay strong and support Black folx always. If you love Chinatowns and hate racism against Chinese people, make sure you stand up for Black people too.

TALK TO YOUR ASIAN FAMILIES ABOUT ANTI-BLACK BEHAVIOUR AND ATTITUDES

When Black people win, we all win. This dish is pure comfort food, the gravy should be bold and silky. The shrimp should be bouncy and crunchy, not overcooked. Enjoy with steamed white rice only!

For a meatless version, replace the shrimps with fried, firm tofu chunks, and replace the pork with a mix of rehydrated dried shiitake mushrooms and fresh mushrooms.

We hate pigs, but we love pork: this fried rice has both char siu and lap cheung. And for an extra flavor bomb, XO sauce. The XO sauce that I'm using is homemade from my mom.

If you want to make your own: fry dried shrimps, rehydrated dried scallops, Virginia ham, garlic and shallots in plenty of vegetable oil, low and slow until golden and completely dried out. It's delicious. You can also buy it, but it won't be the same.

If you are a cop, you do not have permission to cook this recipe. You are trash people and you deserve to eat like trash. The final dish should be really fragrant and savory, with pops of big flavor.

Fuck the police! Forever and ever. Stop killing Black people.

everyone knows by now that it's not enough to be simply "not racist," we have to be anti-racist. And learning about and engaging more deeply with how other cultures live and eat is an important part of that work. The more we explore and shine a light on BIPOC food, the closer we get to a deeper understanding of one another.

I grew up, like most POC kids, eating my culture's food under the white gaze. Meaning our food was (and is) considered "weird, stinky and gross." This recipe attempts to challenge this othering of BIPOC food.

This is a vegan recipe using A-Choy, a vegetable probably unfamiliar to most people. It is a leafy lettuce, very popular in Hong Kong and Taiwan, but hard to find here. So hard to find in fact, that I couldn't source any myself. I'm using romaine lettuce as a substitute.

In this recipe, the lettuce is braised, which a lot of white folx will probably find odd. Yes, you can cook lettuce! It brings out a buttery, rich flavor. The sauce is made from fermented beancurd, which to many, will be an acquired taste. It's very pungent, but balanced with sugar it's incredibly delicious. It tastes like a savory, Asian blue cheese dressing, which pairs perfectly with romaine. I hope this recipe challenges everyone's notions of what is considered normal food vs. food that is "exotic" or "weird."

THE MORE WE EXPLORE AND SHINE A LIGHT ON BIPOC FOOD,

THE CLOSER WE GET TO A DEEPER UNDERSTANDING OF ONE ANOTHER.

Prep: Quarter lettuce. Mince garlic. Slice shallots.

- 1 Fry garlic, shallot and bean-curd in oil for a minute, then balance with salt, sugar and white pepper to taste.
- 2 In a clean pan, fry lettuce in a splash of vegetable oil quickly until wilted, remove from heat.
- 3 Place lettuce on a plate, drizzle with bean curd sauce, chili oil and sprinkle fried garlic over top.

BEEF HO FUN

BEEF HO FUN

Stry-fried Beef Ho Fun or "Gon Chow Ngau Haw" is my ultimate comfort food. I crave it all the time.

I wanted to make this recipe as a love letter to Chinatown, as it's the quintessential Cantonese dish.

Chinatowns have experienced so much racism since the pandemic started. We've seen restaurants go down, elderly grammas assaulted, and putrid hate speech spewed our way. But Chinatown is forever. We've seen worse and we will survive and thrive in spite of the blatant Sinophobic bullshit that comes our way. BTW, if you have referred to the Coronavirus as the "Chinese Flu" or "Kung Flu" you are not allowed to cook this recipe.

This dish has very few ingredients but requires serious technique to achieve the famous smoky flavour known as "wok hei" or "breath of the wok." Good Chinese chefs know how to master this technique. It will not be the same at home. Not only is it impossible to create "wok hei" without the fire power of a restaurant wok station, but it's extremely difficult to keep the noodles intact and also achieve the perfect balance between subtle and savoury flavour. That's why MSG is a must, you won't get that same depth if you rely only on salt. (Ps. anyone who thinks that MSG is a lesser ingredient needs to read a few more books on gastronomy.)

The final dish should be beefy, savoury, a bit smoky, and sweet with onions. It's an oily dish, it should be slippery and satisfying, really good after a night of drinking.

CHINATOWNS HAVE EXPERIENCED SO MUCH RACISM SINCE THE PANDEMIC STARTED.

BUT CHINATOWN IS FOREVER.

Prep: Separate rice noodles. Marinate steak with salt, sugar, water, cornstarch. Slice onions. Cut scallions into big pieces.

- 1 Flash fry steak in oil, drain and reserve.
- 2 Coat a nonstick pan with oil and fry rice noodles on high heat.
- 3 Shake the pan to toss but avoid touching the noodles too much, they will break.
- 4 Season with salt, soy, dark soy and MSG.
- 5 Add beef, onions, scallions and sprouts.
- 6 Fry, tossing together, until well mixed and beef is cooked through.

SWEET & SOUR PORK

This might be the most iconic Chinese dish ever. It's also the most misunderstood. People always speak on its name without knowing the facts. Some say it's inauthentic and that "real" Chinese people don't eat it. Some call it junky, chop suey trash. They dismiss it as "white" Chinese food.

The truth is, Chinese people love Sweet & Sour Pork. Kids, adults, seniors, everyone. Yes, it exists in Hong Kong. It's a dish that was adapted to cater to white tastes—and we all eat it. It's not fake Chinese food, it's a symbol of entrepreneurial hustle. We make this dish everyday at the restaurant and it's as authentic as it gets. I've served it to Chinese-Guyanese, Trini, Jamaicans, Filipinx and everyone in between. I hope this recipe helps change the perception of takeout Chinese food as junky or trashy. Instead, I think Sweet & Sour Pork can be the ultimate unifier.

The final dish should be really crunchy, not over-sauced, bright with citrus and well balanced.

Prep: Cube and marinate pork with salt, cornstarch and MSG and leave in the fridge overnight. Cut onion and peppers into small chunks. Slice lemon.

- 1 Combine eggs and pork, then coat in cornstarch.
- 2 Deep fry until golden, drain and set aside on a paper towel lined tray.
- 3 Bring oil back to temperature and fry pork a second time until crisp and golden brown. Drain and set aside.
- 4 To make sauce, combine vinegar, sugar, pineapple juice and tomato puree in a pot in a ratio of 4:4:4:1.
- 5 Stir together and bring to a boil.
- 6 Add enough cornstarch slurry to thicken. Add pineapple pieces, onions, peppers, lemons. Add pork and toss to combine.

When I was a kid, I spent a lot of time at my gramma's house. She practically raised me while my parents worked full time. Everything I know about food, I learned from her. I spent my childhood cooking with her, grocery shopping with her, and eating out (and criticizing every meal) with her. As an adult, I saw her often, on Saturdays, for dim sum. She passed away a few months ago and weekends haven't really felt the same.

This was one of my gramma's go-to dishes and I make it whenever I want to feel close to her. It's got all the hallmarks of Southern Chinese village cooking: humble ingredients, steamed, simple food.

Like my gramma, this dish is elegant and refined. It's silky, smooth and fragrant. But many Westerners will complain that the texture is challenging for them. Steaming makes the skin soft and slippery and the colour more grey than it is golden. If you really want to be anti-racist, you have to accept different textures in food. Chinese people have more than 5000 years of eating experience. We eat it all, all flavors, all textures, and it's all delicious. Refusing to try certain foods because it's unfamiliar shows ignorance. My gramma hated ignorant people.

The final dish should be perfumed with star anise and ginger, and the jus, which is the best poured over white rice, should taste like the best chicken soup ever. Shoutout to my gramma, I miss her everyday.

Prep: Cut scallions into big pieces. Slice ginger. Marinate chicken legs with salt, sugar, soy and Shaoxing wine overnight.

- 1 Arrange scallions in a low shallow dish to make a rack for the chicken.
- 2 Place chicken legs on top of scallions in one layer.
- 3 Scatter ginger and star anise over chicken.
- 4 Place dish onto a steaming rack in a wok with water, cover and steam until chicken is cooked through, about 20 minutes.
- 5 Garnish with chopped scallions and serve with white rice.

All Cops Are Bastards. Yes, that includes your cop dad, or uncle, or stepbrother, or any other cop you know who you think is a good person. They're all bastards. Any police officer who willingly stands behind a force that protects those who kill without impunity, are all complicit in murder.

The police force is the world's biggest gang. They prey on the innocent. And they have been killing innocent Black men and women for hundreds of years.

I started this project to keep the conversation going, and to keep our foot on the gas. We must demand justice and keep our knee on their necks until we get it. As I write this recipe, I am demanding justice for George Floyd. For Breonna Taylor. For Jacob Blake. I am demanding that cops stop targeting, terrorizing, and brutalizing Black communities. All Cops Are Bastards. Black Lives Matter.

The final dish should be full of deep sea flavor, rich with crab fat and sweet with crab meat. Make sure you don't overcook the crabs!

Serve with Golden Fried Rice. Recipe to follow.

Prep: Clean, quarter and smash crab. Cut scallions into big pieces. Chop scallions for garnish. Slice ginger. Chop garlic. Beat eggs. Make seafood powder by roasting and grinding dried shrimps and scallops.

- 1 Fry garlic in oil until golden, drain and reserve, saving the oil.
- 2 Season noodlefish and coat with cornstarch and egg.
- 3 Fry until golden, drain and set aside on a paper towel lined tray. Season with salt and seafood powder.
- 4 Arrange scallions in a low shallow dish to make a rack for the crab.
- 5 Place crab on top of scallions in one layer. Add ginger, garlic, a splash of wine.
- 6 Place dish onto a steaming rack in your wok with water, cover and steam for about 8 minutes.

I named this project Chinese Protest Recipes because we need to keep the momentum going. It's clear that we have a lot of work to do, especially when it comes to supporting Black folx. I hope everyone stays vigilant, active and uses their platform, however big or small, to speak up. I never used to speak up. The issues always felt too big and everything always seemed so hopeless. But in this moment, I cannot stay silent.

I used to just post about Chinese food. But I will now continue to use my humble platform as a way to speak out against the systems and forces that keep BIPOC down.

Many have asked me how I know so much about these complex food issues. I'm proud to say that I work at a Black-led agency in social impact based in NYC. As the head of creative, I work with an elite team of former Obama and BLM strategists. My boss is on the Color of Change board. We work with clients like Amnesty International and The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation. I am immersed in racial, social, political data everyday. I know things, I see things and I'm actively going through my own unlearning as well.

But my biggest learning comes from being a Chinese person and from working at a Chinese restaurant in one of the most diverse neighbourhoods in the world. Working in a predominantly working class, BIPOC area on weekends gives me a ton of perspective. I interact with immigrants, seniors, the unemployed, non-English speakers, the homeless, the marginalized. These are my people.

Having worked in the white corporate ad world for many years, often being the only POC in a boardroom, pushed me into social impact, into embracing my own cultural identity more fully, and into cooking at a Chinese BBQ shop. The agency world is insufferably white and I was tired of making rich, ignorant white people, even richer and even more powerful.

If you want to commit to change, start by asking yourself some tough, honest questions: Who do you work with? Are all your bosses white? Is your social circle all white? Do you have any BIPOC friends? Do you ever eat BIPOC food? Examine your surroundings, and speak up. That's what I did. And I hope everyone will start to do the same.

Justice for Breonna Taylor.
Justice for George Floyd.
Black Lives Matter.
